MEGA fast and safe download from the largest filesize gp.Addressing the Future of Mobility with MyWay and LU As New York City's Modern Taxi Commission prepares to launch its revised Taxi and Limousine (TLC) regulatory system — known as MyWay — one of the major components of the new TLC rules is expanding access to carpool and vanpool programs and public transportation. Cab companies have always had access to a network of public transportation options. MyWay is designed to enhance their use of alternative-transportation services by providing incentives to participate in the network. To make MyWay a success, however, the regulations need to address a real problem: the shortage of accessible public transportation options for taxi and limousine customers. The TLC's new regulations aim to help reduce that problem by increasing participation by licensed vehicles of all kinds in public transportation services. In other words, city residents can actually book a ride home from a cab with a bus or subway route to their destination. To make that happen, taxis and limousines have to be in transit service, which means they have to carry at least three passengers or they have to have at least 10% of their seats reserved. Rides from taxis and limos to public transportation will be allowed only after the passenger has booked a trip with the specific service they wish to take. The TLC's MyWay proposal, however, does not directly address the need to add carpool and vanpool options to the network, because such programs are not yet in place as a regular part of the public transportation system. When the commission adopted its goals for the TLC, it noted that "dire transportation problems... will persist unless [the] city adopts a range of innovative transportation solutions such as programs that encourage carpooling and vanpooling" (see BOX "MyWay Goals"). To provide the tools to encourage those innovations, the TLC is seeking to eliminate barriers to that market. For instance, making available efficient, low-cost vans for carpooling will remove a key cost-and-inconvenience barrier. Unfortunately, the TLC has not considered many of the other incentives, including subsidies, that need to be in place to allow carpooling and vanpooling to become more affordable and convenient alternatives to owning one's own 648931e174
